MISCELLANEOUS.

DYSPEPSIA.

It is a misery experienced when we suddenly become aware that we possess a diabolical arrangement called a stomach.

The stomach is a reservoir from which every fibre and tissue must be nourished, and any trouble with it soon felt throughout the whole system.

Among a dozen dyspepsias no two will have the same predominant symptoms. Dyspepsias of active mental power and a bilious temperament are subject to Stomachic Dyspepsia; those with thin and nervous are abandoned to Nervous Dyspepsia; those with a phlegmatic and sluggish disposition are wonderfully forgetful; others have great irritability of temper.

Whatever form Dyspepsia may take, one thing is certain.

The underlying cause is in the liver.

And one thing more is equally certain, no one will remain a dyspeptic who will use

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

It will correct the Liver, regulate the Stomach, Expel flat gases, Alleviate indigestion, Assist Digestion, and, at the same time

Start the Liver to working, when all other troubles soon disappear.

My wife was a confirmed dyspeptic. Some three years ago she was induced by Dr. Seiner, of Augusta, Me., to try Simmons' Liver Regulator. I feel gratified to say she has given her, and may all who read this, as well as those who have chronic or other ailments of the liver, which chronic or other ailments, Simmons' Liver Regulator and I feel confident health will be restored to all who will be advised.

See that you get the Genuine, with red Z on front of wrapper.

LIFE UNDER THE CANVAS.

A Circus Employee's Hard Lot - Victims

animals and Less Wretched Boves.

The variety of incident afforded by traveling with a circus and the nomadic sort of existence it grants appeals strongly to certain traits of human nature, and there are never wanting men to fill every sort of position in entertainments under canvas.

With Barnum's show, for instance, a regiment of subordinates are employed, and every one is as carefully drilled for his work as a soldier is for his duties. But the glamour which invests the life of a circus employee will be found to disappear behind the scenes and many disadvantages to appear.

On the last night that Barnum was in Brooklyn recently, a Tribune reporter fell into conversation with the man in charge of the performing seals.

They appeared upon the stage and went through their tricks of thrumming the harjo and guitar. One of the uncouth animals was picking away at the bar of his cage with his flipper. "He thinks he has his leg jammed," remarked the man in charge, "and he will hit there by the hour and do that. We take the time to teach them tricks when we are spending the winter in Bridgeport. One has to know his animals to get along with them, but they would bite a stranger's seals, but they would bite a stranger's seals, but they would bite a stranger's seals."

See that scar (pointing to the back of one of his hands). Well, a strange seal was put in the cage a few days ago, and when I went to clean it out he bit me. You see, I didn't know me.

"Of course, the case of the lions and the tigers is the most dangerous. A man came near being killed in the lions' cage this morning. We all thought he was a 'goner.' Every man has two cages to care for, and we have to go in among all the animals. I have one of the lions' cages myself. We only control them by fear, our whips being of steel covered with rawhide. The men in charge of the elephants have their goods ready to stick into the animals whenever they are not chained. The man whose job it is to lead the next cage has to sleep with the giraffe every night to see that it does not get sick. It is the tenderest animal we have and is the only giraffe in this country."

The reporter ventured to remark that if the giraffe's throat became sore it would be likely to prove a serious matter, as it was so long.

"Yes," said the keeper. "A man was here the other day who wished his throat was as long as the giraffe's when he drank whisky. But that was a 'hoax.' The question some people ask is, why, some of them appear to know nothing at all when they get in the 'circus. They will ask if an animal eats or lies down to sleep. If a lion roars they ask what he does that for. One man wanted to know if the giraffe ever put its head down to sleep. The woman seemed to think that the wild animals must do everything different from what tame ones do. The majority of people don't know the simplest facts in natural history, one would think. If the animals could talk they would be able to tell many strange things about them. I don't mean to say people can't read, but they will look at those words, 'performing seals,' on my wagon, and then ask me what the animals do. I don't know what to tell them, but we have water for them, and what they eat, when they see what we feed them. It is a pleasure to talk to any one who understands something about the animals. I don't think $40 a month and board pays for what we have to endure from the animals and people every day." - New York Tribune.

How to Inspire Confidence.

Henry Ward Beecher certainly owed a debt of gratitude to his teacher in mathematics, not only for the knowledge acquired through his tuition, but for lessons tending to strength of character. He tells this story to illustrate the teacher's method.

He was sent to the blackboard, and went, uncertain, soft, full of whimpering.

"That lesson must be learned," said the teacher, in a very quiet tone, but with a terrible intensity. All explanations and excuses he tried under foot with utter scornfulness. "I want that problem done," he said, "and I want it done by ten o'clock."

"I did study it two hours," he said. "That's nothing to me. I want the lesson. You need not study it at all, or you may study it ten hours, just to suit yourself. I want it done by ten o'clock."

"It was tough for a green boy," says Beecher, "but I scolded him. In less than a month I had the most intense sense of intellectual independence, and courage to defend my recitations. His cold and calm voice would fall upon me in the midst of a demonstration. 'No!' he hesitated, and then went back to the beginning, and on reaching the same spot again, 'No!' uttered with the tone of conviction, barred my progress."

"The next," and I sat down in red confusion.

"He, too, was stopped with 'No!' but went right on, finished, and as he sat down, was rewarded with 'Very well.'"

"Why?" whispered I. "I recited it just as he did, and you said 'No!'"

"I don't know," he said. "You stick to it! It is not enough to know your lesson. You must know that you know it. You have learned nothing till you are sure. If all the world says 'No!' your business is to say 'Yes!' and prove it."

—Youth's Companion.

Thieves at the Solera.

French hostesses this season have had to take the precaution of watching who attend their soirees, in consequence of a gang calling themselves the "Franc-Tireurs," who make it a practice to attend, uninvited, various large receptions and carry off valuable property. It is the custom now in large clubs and conservatory of music which was at first intended to be only a collection of whistles. It grew to fine proportions, comprising whistles of all ages and lands and of all materials except, possibly, the pig's tail.

There were terra cotta, copper, ivory, stone, horn whistles and many more. A sketch of many of these has lately been published by La Nature. Among others there are the roulette whistle, railroad agent's whistle, scholar's whistle, fireman's whistle, army whistle, Belgian whistle, and many more of a modern sort, simple and complex. A curious imitation whistle is now made in fire works. - Globe Democrat.

Tea at $10 a Pound.

Ten worth, or at least costing, $10 per pound can be had in some Chinese stores in this city. It is used as medicine, and an American was seen buying some of it yesterday. It is very strong, and is said to be good for heart troubles, throat diseases, and for weak eyes as a wash. A cup brewed from it would keep a man awake a week. - Portland Oregonian.

Dangerous Piles of Silver Dollars.

Silver money piled up in heaps, like cordwood or lumber, is very dangerous, as it is very likely to topple over and crush the clerks. I know it sounds like a fable to fellows whose expensiveness have never been sagged by more than a faithful quarter dollars to talk of the risk one runs in a place like this of getting crushed to death under an avalanche of gold and lawful coined money, but the danger is great, nevertheless. The other day we noticed that our high wall of bags of silver dollars - $500 in each bag - was bagging out in the middle to fall. The old clerks all ran to let it come, but the colored man, ignorant of the tremendous weight of silver, ran up to the carrying pile and pushed with his hands, thinking he could brace it up. As well try to hold up so much falling stone.

Down it came, with a crash, and the colored man's narrow escape, getting off with a few bruises and scratches. Six years ago, at our old office at Sixth and Locust streets, a pile of bags of silver, $1,000 in a bag, fell upon me and bore me to the floor. My head had a narrow escape from getting crushed in like an eggshell, and I was landed from the fact to the breast. The Irishman, who was our watchman then, sprang to my assistance and clawed the bags right and left off me. When I caught my breath again I was thankful for my escape from being crushed to a pulp. There are people who would like to take their chances of getting buried under a heap of money, just for the sake of being where there is plenty of it, but none so foolish as to be found among the Uncle Sam hirelings whose daily toil consists in stealing the big surplus about. Sub-Treasury Clerk in Globe-Democrat.

The New Mexico Shepherd's Terror.

There is one dreaded plant among the mountains which makes it a very frightful day for the sheep that are so unfortunate as to find it. No one seems to know its name, but its effects are a terror to the wool grower. In five minutes after a sheep has eaten it he swells as if he had swallowed a young balloon, jumps high in the air and falls dead. When a shepherd gets a first glimpse of these antics he rushes into the flock, howling like a Comanche, waving his blanket, whooping up his dogs, and starting his sheep on a dead run, which he takes care that they maintain until they are completely exhausted. In this way he can save most of them. That spot is marked with a big black cross in his mental diary thereafter, and he slams it as he would the plague. If he is ever obliged to take his sheep past it, he keeps them on the best gallop that they may have no time to graze. Being thus avoided the place is rank with rich grasses, powerful temptation to the stranger who comes by with sheep.

A few miles below us here is one little nook where this poison weed is found. All the shepherds in the country know it and give it a wide berth, but every once in a while a strange flock gets bitten there. Some time ago an old man, named Antonio Lacero, was passing through with 1,500 head of sheep and camped there at nightfall. In the morning every last one of his sheep was dead. Last year a Navajo lost 500 head of sheep there in a couple of hours, and a flock belonging to Hon. Amado Chavez strayed in there and lost 200 of their number dead before the shepherds could get them away. - New Mexico Cor.

Only Crossed the Threshold.

Now let me turn to the invigorating that, in spite of all forms of degeneration, life has ever moved forward. There has been a steady gain. It seemed impossible to reach man when the world was no further along than corals and trilobites, but man was reached. And if you will go back with history to the earliest days of our Aryan race, you will see how miraculous is the progress that will lift it up to the present Saxon and American type. And still it is clear that progress ahead is to be as great as that behind. We have reached in some way the golden rule, the telescope, the steam engine, the printing press.

As ethical beings we have only crossed the threshold of higher obligation. Civilization has not yet come in sight of its goal. All our energy will ultimately be concentrated in higher living. The degenerative elements of society will slough off; the regenerative forces will multiply. This is the sure hope that science gives us. We can go forward without doubt. - E. P. P. in Globe-Democrat.

Spartan System of Marriage.

No one desires to see Spartanism revived in these times, but we may learn in the midst of a demonstration. The Spartans worshipped the beautiful and useful, and they took means to secure them. Bodily perfection was attained by enforced, well appointed exercise. There were but few sickly men and women among them. None sickly were permitted to marry, and in health were compelled to do so. If they refused, they were punished. Bachelors after a certain age were shut out of the society of women, and once a year were shamed in public. Neither girls nor boys were permitted to marry before maturity was reached. This Spartan system of marriage, purely for the welfare of the state, continued for 500 years, and during that time there were produced a succession of the strongest and bravest men and the most healthy and beautiful women that the world has ever known. - Boston Herald.

Helping the Right Side

To help the right side is not only commendable from a point of view, but is judicious and prudent when that help is enlisted in behalf of the right side of the liver. The most efficient help is afforded by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, an anti-bilious medicine. When the liver is accompanied by constipation, sick-headache, furred tongue, nausea, occasional vertigo, and a general soreness of the face, skin and ball of the eye. The author of these symptoms, liver complaint, routed by the Bitters is accompanied by a general complaint, for the same reason, in which this standard medicine is adapted. Don't use it by fits and starts, but systematically, and you will surely result in a perfect restoration of health.
